Your Name, Ph.D.
Department of XXXX
Northern Illinois University, Year
Your Advisor's Name, Director

This is where you write your abstract of the dissertation as a whole. The abstract should briefly introduce the problem, summarize the chapters, and preview some conclusions. A diss abstract can be longer than a typical journal article abstract, perhaps even a page or two.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Here's where you acknowledge folks who helped, probably your advisor and committee, perhaps funding agencies, influential professors and peers and anyone else you want to thank. You can be as formal or informal as you like here.

DEDICATION

Here is where you can dedicate your dissertation to someone, if you wish. Common dedications include spouses, family members, mentors, or anyone else who has been particularly supportive. You can be as formal or informal as you like here, and you can even include a quote if you like. This is not required, but it is a moment to be very sweet and reflect on the PhD journey as a whole.

INTRODUCTION

Words go here. This example is an adaptation of Roland Winkler's example thesis (Winkler, 2015).

The natbib package allows differentiation between parenthetical citations (like the example above) or in-text citations. You may find Booth et al. (2008) to be useful reading in framing your research and writing your dissertation.
